There are a number of new animations that use motion data, but not every player in the player's movement can contribute to the new animations. New Real Player Motion Control Data The new generation of players in FIFA 22 display animations that have been enhanced using real player motion capture data, further showcasing the realism of these players. Real Player motion capture data is available for all FIFA 22 players and includes: Striker Motion for goal headers Forwards for their motion, acceleration and speed after receiving the ball (i.e. speed diagonals and speed with control) Fullbacks for speed (i.e. diagonal and through ball speed) Midfield for speed (i.e. diagonal and speed with control) Goalkeeper for speed, acceleration and movement (i.e. all running, bursts and blocks) Not all of the above motion capture data is automatically applied to a player's animation. The player's speed, running, acceleration and passing will always be set according to the player's physical traits. For example, a player that is tall and heavy will have a higher player physics (speed, acceleration, passing, first touches, catch up speed, reaction, accelerations/braking forces, etc.) in comparison to a player that is small and light. The following combinations of player movement or player traits will not apply the motion capture data: Players that are extremely fast Players that are very light or slow Players that are tall and big, small and light Players that are not fast Players that do not accelerate or slow down quickly Players that are not strong Players that have a high player physics (speed, acceleration, passing, first touches, catch up speed, reaction, accelerations/braking forces, etc.) Players that are not in ball possession Players who are not in ball possession that are very fast Players who are not in ball possession who are very light Players who are not in ball possession that are very weak Players who are not in ball possession that are slow Players who are not in ball possession that are not strong Players who are not in ball possession that have a very high player physics Players that are in possession of the ball Players that are not in possession of the ball that are very fast Players that are not in possession of the ball that are very

The bill now heads to President Donald Trump for his signature. RIO DE JANEIRO - U.S. Congress approved a $1.1 trillion tax cut for corporations and the wealthy on Saturday, sharply reducing taxes for both groups and delivering a stunning win to President Donald Trump and Republicans. The package also includes a provision setting the U.S. in a permanent tax system of low rates for some individuals and corporations. The final bill must still pass the House and be signed by Trump before it goes into effect in January. But even if a handful of Democratic-held rural House districts decide to defy Trump and the GOP, the party's sweep of the House should ensure its passage. The overhaul of the nation's tax system will expire in 10 years unless Trump and Congress agree to extend them. The stakes are huge for business owners. Many oppose the tax cuts, arguing that they will encourage people to borrow more money and spend more, causing an even bigger economic downturn. High-frequency stocks traders are already shorting stocks on expectations that the bill will likely weigh on the market in the coming days. The final move in rates will be the fifth since April, raising taxes on net profits and lowering tax rates for many individuals and corporations. Members of Congress celebrated the passage in raucous
