One of the last major territorial conflicts of the First World War ended with a decisive German victory and the abandonment of the White Russians to their fates. The Little War The 1914 "Little" war between Russia and Austro-Hungary was the final conflict of the First World War. When Russia collapsed, the Russifying Cossacks and the Austro-Hungarians occupied a huge area in the North Caucasus and Crimea. The Austro-Hungarian claims were never seriously contested. Somewhat surprisingly the Central Powers won the war in the North Caucasus. The Ottoman army conquered Tbilisi and most of Armenia. They established a puppet state, the Independent Republic of Georgia. The Turks took control of Batumi and some other coastal cities. The Ottoman army also took control of the eastern Crimea. In the winter of 1917-18 the Russians and Cossacks reconquered the Caucasus. The local population welcomed the tsarist government. Map of the North Caucasus and the Crimea, 1917 Here's an excerpt from a book about the North Caucasus published by Harvard University Press, Ethnic Cleansing in the Twentieth Century: The Case of the Crimean Tatars, by Timothy Colton and Frederick Cooper ( At a meeting on June 18, 1917, in the city of Makhachkala, a subordinate of Her Majesty the Tsar and Governor-General of the Muslim lands
