gluten-containing grains is high and this can lead to an incorrect diagnosis. It is therefore important to know the rate of gluten consumption and the types of gluten-containing products in population. The aim: To describe the consumption of gluten-containing products, the knowledge and attitudes toward gluten and its role in the development of allergic diseases in a pediatric gastroenterology outpatient clinic. Methods: The survey was administered to all children and adults with suspected food allergy who came for a consultation at the pediatric gastroenterology outpatient clinic in Pescara, Italy. Results: Thirty-nine participants were included in this study c6a93da74d
