The structural, electronic and vibrational properties of argon doped graphene nanosheets (Ar-GNs) are investigated by using the first-principles density functional theory calculations. We show that the adsorption of argon atoms on the surface of graphene has a significant influence on the structural stability of the graphene sheet. In the case of undoped graphene, the adsorption of argon atom on the upper side of graphene and the formation of an additional interlayer are energetically favorable compared to the other cases. When two argon atoms are adsorbed on the upper and lower sides of graphene, the dissociation of the argon atoms from graphene is very likely. The influence of the structural and electronic properties of argon atoms on the electronic and vibrational properties of doped graphene sheet is also considered. It is found that the adsorption of argon atoms on the surface of graphene sheet causes a significant reduction of the band gap of graphene, and the adsorption of argon atoms on the sites of vacancies in the GN sheet leads to a significant increase of the band gap of GN. In addition, the adsorption of argon atoms induces the creation of new edge states of the GN sheet.The opinions expressed by columnists are their own and do not necessarily represent the views of Townhall.com.
